

WANT TREES SPARED

Sulzer and Mann Object to Site of Grant Monument.

SELECTED SPOT UNSUITED

Botanic Garden Should Be Kept for Nature's Works.

INAPPROPRIATE FOR OTHERS

Addresses in the House in Commemoration of the Report of the Committee.

Representative Sulzer of New York and Representative Mann of Illinois yesterday afternoon spoke on the floor of the House in criticism of the action of the House committee on the library in reporting adversely the Mann and Sherman bills to provide for the erection of the Grant memorial on some other site than that in the Botanic Gardens selected by the Grant memorial statue commission. In the course of his speech Mr. Sulzer said:

"Mr. Chairman, by the courtesy of the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. Lamb) I shall take advantage of this opportunity to say a few words regarding a matter that I deem of importance to the city of Washington, to the country generally, and especially of sufficient gravity from every point of view to command the immediate attention and consideration of every member of this Congress. Some time ago legislation was enacted providing that a suitable memorial be erected in the city of Washington to commemorate the memory and achievements of Gen. Grant. No one in this city is more in favor of erecting an enduring monument in the Capital city of the nation to the great military chieftain of the civil war than I am. It is my duty and proper that it should be done, and I want to see it done. The government owes Gen. Grant a debt that can never be paid so long as the government shall endure his glory will be sung in song and story.

First Site Selected.

"But, sir, the question now is, Where should this memorial be located? The commission delegated to locate the site for the monument selected, in the first instance, a site in the ellipse immediately in front of the White House—between the White House and the Washington Monument. That site, in my judgment, was a very proper location and in all respects most suitable. Afterward, for some reason or other, the commission abandoned that site and selected the Botanic Garden for the site. In my opinion, that change was most unwise and the gravest kind of a mistake. The Botanic Garden, for many years, has been one of the historic landmarks of the District of Columbia, and under the guiding genius of its eminent director, William R. Smith, it has been used, as well as ornamental. Thousands and thousands of people coming to this city every year visit the Botanic Garden and enjoy its many beauties. It is one of the pleasure resorts of Washington, especially to every man, woman and child that loves flowers and trees and plants and shrubs.

It is a monument to the memory of Mr. Smith and his work, and it should be preserved or destroyed. For years trees have been planted in this garden by the most distinguished citizens of our country, and by eminent citizens of the world, so that today it is one of the most interesting and beautiful places for visitors in all the city of Washington. Every spot in it is so beautiful and so interesting that it should be preserved or destroyed, and it is the most unsuitable place that could be selected for a great monument to a military hero. The site selected by the Botanic Garden is near the street to the west. Already excavations have begun and the work of destruction will go on unless we stop it. Anyone who will take the time to visit the Botanic Garden will see at a glance that it is inappropriate the place for a memorial and that its destruction will necessitate the lasting injury and destruction of a large number of valuable and beautiful historic trees—especially one great beautiful tree planted by John J. Crittenden of Kentucky, in 1862, from an acorn which he brought from that famous old manorwealth to commemorate his noble efforts in endeavoring to bring about peace and stop the deadly conflict between the north and the south.

The Crittenden Oak.

"That tree is one of the most magnificent in all the city and is known as the Crittenden peace tree. Its destruction now would be a shame—a piece of vandalism. That little acorn, planted by the patriotic hand of Senator Crittenden, has grown into a great oak, one of the finest trees in the garden. That tree is an historic landmark and should be sacred from vandals' hands. That little acorn, planted there in 1862 to commemorate an heroic effort for peace—today, in this great oak, it is a symbol of peace and a fitting reminder of the noblest of our countrymen. It would be a desecration—a lamentable desecration—to destroy it. If the monument goes up the tree must be cut down. It cannot be saved by removal. According to the judgment of experts who have investigated the matter and who know the most about the subject it is impossible to dig up and transplant any of these great and beautiful trees that must be destroyed to make way for the monument. If they are transplanted they will surely die. In the future we should heed these historic trees will be lost.

"I am opposed to cutting down these historic trees and destroying the chief beauties of the Botanic Garden. It ought not to be done. Congress should stop it, and stop it at once. As I said, I do not believe this site is suitable for the Washington for the Grant monument. It is an out-of-the-way and an obscure place. If erected there, it cannot be seen from the avenue and this magnificent Grant memorial should be in a place with sufficient space around it so that it can be seen from all sides and from all directions. The selection of this site in the Botanic Garden is a mistake, and the commission selecting it should be condemned by the resolution of Congress, and hereafter we should be more careful in selecting men on commissions to select sites for monuments in this city.

Most Suitable Site.

"The most suitable site in Washington for the Grant memorial is the first site selected, in the ellipse between the White House and the Monument. That was Gen. Grant's park. He laid it out and spent much of his leisure there during the time he was in the White House. Beyond a doubt it is the most suitable and the most appropriate place in Washington for this monument, and the Congress should see to it that it is erected there and kept out of the hands of the committee on the library.

"Now, I want to say that I am in sympathy with those who desire to make Washington the city beautiful. I believe it is so today, and destined to grow more so as the years come and go. Every citizen in the land should be interested in making the capital of this country the most beautiful city in the world, but we can never do it with commissions composed of men such as we have appointed heretofore. In the future we should select men who know something about art and trees and perspective, and less about law and science and statistics. I am a friend of William R. Smith, the director of the Botanic Garden—a truly great man; a man who has done a great work for all the people, a world-wide work for this country; a man who has done more in two generations than any other man in all this land to foster and inculcate the love of the beautiful, the love of art, the love of trees and shrubs and plants and flowers.

"William R. Smith loves these grand old trees. Let us save them. Let us give heed to his protest and stop the desecration of the Botanic Garden ere it is too late.

Remnants of Silks, 29c. Qualities Sold Up to 89c Yard.
